After the first offensive operation in Vermont hundreds of bodies strewn the ground—bodies of deer; and the grand total of animal casualties is likely to run considerably into the thousands.

Kitchener really seems to be in Greece, despite the efforts of the rumor-mongers to have him headed for India. However, that is not to say that he will not end up in India before he returns to London.

Italy puts the Ancona outrage up to the United States chiefly, as if the United States were the conservator of humanity. Meanwhile the United States is trying to play the very difficult role against no slight opposition.

An exchange announces the Vermont state grange will hold its annual meeting in Barre next month. However, we are forced to confess that the news is too good to be true, albeit Barre could entertain the organization and would appreciate the opportunity to do so.

One day the entente allies and Serbia have the Bulgarians cornered and the Teutonic allies whipped off the map; the next day the very existence of the entente allies' armies is in jeopardy—to let the dispatches from Greece tell the story. Oh, for a real historian just now!

The right steps are being taken in Rutland, under the prodding of the Parent-Teacher association; they are looking into the safeguards for the lives of school children in case of fire during school hours. The Peabody horror has not, therefore, been wholly without its impress.

Winston Spencer Churchill would have proved himself more of a statesman and less of a bigot if he had waited till the end of the war before criticizing a colleague for something which took place a year and a half ago in the war. The constant bickering among the British war lords is damaging to the allies' cause.

It is proposed in Rutland to hire an additional fireman to watch the new automobile fire truck during fires in order to prevent hoodlums from damaging the machine. Just like a new toy, isn't it? By and by the Rutland officials will feel that they can leave the machine for a minute or so without fear that the machine will be whisked off by some daring fellow. By and by, too, the auto fire truck will be considered no more of a novelty in Rutland than is the horse-drawn apparatus, and then it can be left without hitching. Meanwhile, the officials might trust a little in the good sense and decency of the so-called hoodlum element. If the duties of the proposed additional fireman are to be confined to watching the motor truck during fires, his services would not be seriously needed, we feel sure, and the extra expense might be spared at the outset.

A PIONEER IN OPEN-AIR TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION.
Forty years ago Dr. Edward L. Trudeau, a practicing physician in New York City, was dying of consumption, and, being fond of hunting, he decided to go from his city home up into the mountains of New York state and enjoy his favorite pastime of hunting as much as possible before the summons of death itself should come to him. So Dr. Trudeau went to the Saranac Lake region and began shooting rabbits, the pastime taking him into the open air and the sunshine and developing an appetite for food which outdoor life brings to nearly everyone. But while he was waiting for death, death did not come. Death had been sidetracked through the unsuspected agencies of fresh air, sunshine, pure food, vigorous exercise and the other concomitants of life in the open. Dr. Trudeau, pleased beyond measure by the change in his condition and becoming enamored of the life in the mountains and lake country, lingered on through the cold months of the winter and continued to regain his health. Thus was started the movement for the treatment of persons in the incipient stages of consumption in the Adirondack mountains, a movement which has brought health to hundreds and perhaps thousands of persons who found no relief for their condition in their home communities. Dr. Trudeau lived to see the success of the plan which had such a small beginning and also to conduct experiments which have been valuable aids in the fighting of consumption. For 40 years after he had been given up as a victim of consumption he was permitted to carry on a most important work, and he has just died at his home in Saranac Lake. Dr. Trudeau was most certainly a pioneer in a movement which now has disciples by the thousands in every part of the country where the climate is at all favorable for the outdoor treatment of persons with impaired lungs. Were his simple remedies of sunshine, fresh air and pure food to be taken with greater faith and persistency by countless people, there would be a decided check to the ravages of the so-called white plague in the United States.

A GOOD ROAD: BETTER SERVICE.

Announcement that the automobile passenger service between Rutland and Bethel transported 3,000 people during the 90 days that the service was in operation seems to indicate the success of the venture, and thus it furnishes sufficient incentive to a continuation of the service another year and perhaps a betterment of the service. Chief among those betterments would be a shortening of the running time of the automobiles and thus to bring the east side and the west side of the state into still closer union and to lighten the contrast with the former service when passengers were compelled to make the long railroad detour via Essex Junction or by White River Junction and Bellows Falls. This swifter service can be made possible by the improvement of the highway between Bethel and Rutland. During a considerable part of the past season traffic was held up to a considerable extent by reason of uncertain and soggy highways, into which deep ruts were cut by the heavy vehicles. This applies particularly to the eastern slope of the mountain and toward the base rather than toward the summit. In the latter place the highway has been laid out in serviceable condition and it proved to be a revelation to those who had travelled over the route a few years previously. Now, if some money can be expended on the lower section of the eastern slope, it will be possible to say that an excellent highway, as mountain highways go, connects the east and the west sides of the state. Moreover, the increasing traffic over the highway demands the improvements, which should include a well-drained base and laid with heavy stones.

Here's the right underwear to plunge into as soon as you've had your plunge.

PRES. REEVES GAVE TALK.

Newly Elected Head of Norwich University Spoke on Military Life.

"Men's night" in the series of special services which are being held during the week at the Hedding M. E. church was observed last evening with a small but appreciative audience present. In the absence of the president of the men's brotherhood, Rev. E. F. Newell introduced the speaker, Capt. Ira L. Reeves, U. S. A. Capt. Reeves has recently taken the post of chair at Norwich university, following three years' at the head of the military department at the University of Vermont, and a previous career as an officer of the regular army. The subject of his address was, "Military Education."

The first part of the talk was a brief discussion of the army in general. The speaker explained that the officers receive their commissions in three different ways, by graduating from West Point, by attending some university and taking a competitive examination, and by rising from the ranks through examinations. About 47 per cent of the officers at the present time are West Point men. A commissioned officer holds a commission signed by the president and keeps his office for life, or during good behavior.

A well-balanced army is made up of infantry, comprising about four-sixths of the total number of men, cavalry and artillery making up the other two-sixths. An interesting point introduced here was that the United States is the only country in the world to use its cavalry for unmounted fighting. The first instance of this occurred in the Civil war. Our army is made up of two classes of troops, the standing army numbering about 92,000 officers and men; and a National Guard which is not under direct control of the president, except on certain occasions mentioned in the constitution.

In regard to means of educating the officers and men in the regular army, Capt. Reeves explained that the total number of the army is about 150,000, there is a school in session during a part of every year which all officers must attend. Such studies as international law, the military history of the United States, and field regulations, are prescribed. There are also schools for the enlisted men, where they may study, under officers detailed to teach them, practically anything they choose. There are also a number of colleges in the army where men may become specialists in various branches, for the modern military man is as much of a specialist as the man in civil life.

Capt. Reeves said, "Modern war is a scientific affair," and the men who carry it on must be educated. In 1858 Senator Justin Morrill of Vermont introduced a bill in Congress providing for the granting of land to the states for the purpose of founding colleges to teach the agricultural and mechanical arts. This bill was passed in 1862 with an amendment requiring instruction in military tactics. This was the origin of the "land grant schools," the University of Vermont being one of the 52 in the United States to-day. Each of these schools has an army officer furnished by the government to teach the military part of its curriculum, though some have been inclined until recently to make as little as possible of this branch. There are also a number of private military schools, of which Norwich university is one of the three with a college grade. Norwich and Vermont rank among the 10 highest in the country in their respective classes.

In regard to the value of a military training for a man who does not intend to follow a military career Capt. Reeves contends that, first of all, it teaches a man to obey orders and in this way to expect and demand obedience when he may have occasion to give them in later life, also that, aside from the physical value of the drill, it causes a man to form habits of cleanliness, orderliness and punctuality, wipes out selfishness and has a tendency to develop character and a high sense of honor.

The speaker stated that he did not mean in any way to make light of the non-military institutions, but he strongly urged all Vermonters to send their boys to institutions within the state.

Mr. and Mrs. George Marsh and son of Woodstock were visitors in the city yesterday while on their way to Plainfield, where Mrs. Marsh and child will remain for a visit of several days with her mother, Mrs. Huntton. Mr. Marsh, who was formerly connected with the Barre office of the American Express company, has gone into camp with a party of friends at Pigeon pond. He will remain through a part of the open season for shooting deer before returning to Woodstock, where he is the local representative of the express company.

Mr. and Mrs. Kingston having purchased the farm where Mr. and Mrs. Henry have resided for the past 13 years. The place is located in Barre town not far from the village of South Barre and the deal includes the crops, stock, tools and other personal property. The consideration is not mentioned by the intermediary company, but it is understood that the property purchased was valued at a figure better than $4,000. Mr. and Mrs. Kingston are occupying the property. The deal was consummated through the Barre office of the Vermont Real Estate & Insurance company.

The fear that the official reports published by the enemy might some times cause uneasiness is counter-balanced by the consideration that facts can never be concealed for any length of time and that lies are always recognized as such in the end.

Miss Marion Jordan of Burlington, a 14-year-old flute virtuoso, who has received flattering offers to travel over the country with concert troupes, fulfilled the highest expectations by rendering several selections which were warmly received by the audience. Miss Jordan responded to several encores. Another feature of the program which was highly commended, was the demonstration of the new dance to be introduced this season, as given at the exposition at San Francisco, the dances being given by two pairs of little folks, Miss Katharin Buzzell and Teddie Lawson and Miss Verna Edson and Perley Leslie. The youthful interpreters of the new dances were taught by Prof. and Mrs. George N. Elmore and they performed their part of the entertainment in an excellent fashion. The program was opened with an overture played by Karl Fortsch, to be followed by a selection given by the Cleaves family orchestra, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Cleaves and their two sons. A comedy sketch was admirably produced by Misses Helen Rogers and Antoinette Oligney and William J. Fisher gave a vocal selection. Dancing followed the musicale, music being furnished by the Montpelier Band orchestra.
